Synthing is a networked file synchronization and sharing application, mostly developed to provide peer-to-peer file synchronization between the users of the same local network. This synchronization may be done via different network protocols. It was designed to work on various client platforms, from desktop Linux to mobile devices. Synergy allows the user to, using a single keyboard and mouse, use two or more computers or devices at once. A mouse pointer can be moved between the devices, and each device can be moved on the screen to a specific location. In the end, it behaves like multiple monitors. Synergy is developed by a group of people with the same goal: to create a simple and easy-to-use tool to make the life of the user easier. It's currently in a pre-release phase, but can be used as a beta version on any Linux system with a recent enough distribution. This is an extremely alpha version of Synergy, but the application has already been tested in a production environment for a long time. So if you get it, use it. You can report problems, as well as file patches, pull requests, etc. There is no guarantee that I will not reject your patches, however I will try to answer all emails and I do appreciate if you let me know if you see any problem or missing feature.
