Asia Food Diary About this podcast Asia Food Diary is our pick of the best food and drink podcasts from Asia. Recorded live from Tokyo, Singapore, Beijing, Beijing, Hong Kong and finally San Francisco (the fish is flying, the fish is cooking). In this podcast we explore the different food and drink culture in Asia and the clash of foods and recipes between China and Japan. We're particularly interested in different cuisines in Asia and the foods and drinks that comprise them. We have explored (for the first time in the podcast) the 'country' of Kirin which is the popular beer of Japan. We also feature the process of making kimchi, the food of Korea. And we chat to a man in search of the taste of Singapore as he travels around the city. In 2019, we plan to visit Korea and China. As soon as we know more, we'll get in touch. In the meantime, here's what we had:FILE PHOTO: The logo of Saudi Aramco is seen at the 20th Middle East Oil & Gas Show and Conference (MOES 2017) in Manama, Bahrain, April 24, 2017. REUTERS/Hamad I Mohammed/File Photo DUBAI (Reuters) - Gulf Arab state-owned Aramco will start offering a dividend and an annual buyback of shares in an investment plan for investors as part of a drive to boost the company's capital and make it more attractive to institutional investors, the company's chairman said. Saudi Aramco has been under pressure to boost its share of international investors amid a year of volatility in the global oil markets and a reported $1 trillion in assets under management under review by major fund investors. Under the plan, investor approval would not be required for the reinvestment of dividends, as was the case for the three-year buyback program. Saudi Aramco will also start offering other types of investments including fixed-income, commodities, private equity and venture capital. Aramco, which has not invested in venture capital funds, is now looking at investing in technology, biomedicine and clean
